

DUTY' PROMPTED COUNSEL FULLAM GAVE WITNESSES

Head of Naval Academy
Defends Action Before
Inquiry Court.

TILTS WITH LAWYER
FOR 7 DEFENDANTS

Admits Urging View on Daniels, but Denies Officers Met to Pledge Aid.

(By Tribune Staff Writer.) Annapolis, June 15.—Occupying the stand during the whole of the afternoon session of the court of inquiry, Rear Admiral Fullam, superintendent of the naval academy, defended his course in giving advice to the midshipmen called as witnesses. These conferences were criticized in court yesterday by Representative Hay, of counsel for the defendants, and Admiral Fullam requested this morning that he be allowed to testify.

That he had been guided by a sense of duty was Rear Admiral Fullam's defense. He said he believed the midshipmen would make a serious mistake if they accepted the same position as the seven midshipmen recommended for dismissal, and that he had, therefore, felt obliged to caution them against such action before they went to court.

Kindergarten children marched in perfect step to piano music which they could not hear, and responded without a break to the tempo of the music when it was changed from walking to skipping.

About 2,000 relatives and friends had gathered before the platform built by the class in carpentry when Enoch Henry Currier, principal of the institution, opened the exercises. After the prayer the Rev. Dr. Charles A. Stodard, president of the institution, gave his annual address. While Dr. Stodard spoke Colonel Currier stood on the platform beside him and transposed his speech into the sign language.

Benjamin F. de Castro, a student born in Panama, gave the salutatory address, on "Perseverance."

The appetites of the spectators were then provoked by an exhibition of cooking class methods, which showed that graduates of the school were at least proficient in making cinnamon cakes, lemon cake, graham rolls and sugar cookies.

The kindergarten children enacted Mother Goose rhymes in accordance with Montessori principles. The boys of the first primary class, garbed in Colonial costumes, told what they knew about George Washington. The children demonstrated the efforts being made to produce their voices and their own efforts to cultivate them. While some of the enunciation was extremely clear, not all of the oratory was understandable to the layman.

The advanced classes in voice culture showed that through vibration they were able to control tone as well as rhythm. Two choirs, one of mixed adults and the other of eight boys, gathered around a piano. The choir then followed the piano, singing such songs as "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Rings on Her Fingers," "Tipperary" and "The Midshipmite."

The rhythm was excellent, but the tonal quality was neither sustained nor in pitch.

Twenty-one pupils received diplomas following the valedictory address, by Solis Gershanek. Two of these students had taken special ten-year courses, but the majority studied the eight-year term. There are at present 500 in the institution.

GROUT'S WITNESS NOT QUESTIONED

Stir in Court When Defence Fails to Cross-Examine Ex-Union Bank Man.

TESTIMONY BACKED
PERJURY CHARGE

Plans of Prosecution Upset by Action of Counsel for Ex-City Controller.

The trial of ex-City Controller Edward M. Grout for perjury before County Judge Lewis, in Brooklyn, was marked yesterday by another sensation hardly second in importance, according to the prosecution, to the one on Monday when Edwin J. Stalker, vice-president of the Union Bank when Grout signed the alleged false report of the bank's assets, testified that his chief knew all about the overstatement of assets three days before the bank closed its doors.

Yesterday's sensation came when Stephen C. Baldwin, attorney for Grout, let Stalker leave the stand without one question in cross-examination to shake the damaging testimony of the witness, who had been subpoenaed by Grout.

District Attorney Croysey, since the trial began three weeks ago, has been endeavoring to show that Grout had guilty knowledge of the shaky condition of the Union Bank, and the carrying of had paper, when he signed the report to the State Banking Department, on March 25, 1910, overstating the assets by more than $2,000,000.

Stalker, almost a physical wreck from worry over the failure of the bank, came down from his farm in Windham, Conn., and had taken the stand yesterday after an exhausting examination on Monday. The District Attorney after devastating with documentary evidence the witness' remarkable story of the previous day, handed him over to Mr. Baldwin for cross-examination.

"No cross-examination, your honor," said Mr. Baldwin, "all right, I will submit." The courtroom hummed like a dynamo and eyes turned in the direction of District Attorney Croysey, who apparently was astonished. Stalker betrayed real disappointment.

"You subpoenaed him and I assumed you wanted to cross-examine him," said the prosecutor, turning on Mr. Baldwin.
"I was under subpoena by the defence for the entire case," said Stalker, in a whisper to Judge Lewis.

"I know all that," replied Mr. Baldwin. "We have no questions."

Mr. Croysey sat down and Stalker left the stand with a reluctant air. As he passed the press tables he paused.

"They didn't want to cross-examine me; I guess they knew better," he said.

Throughout it all, Mr. Grout sat quietly, almost indifferently, at the table beside his counsel.

Mr. Baldwin's reluctance to open the avenues to further disclosures by his client's aid, District Attorney Croysey's plans. He had been counting on a lengthy cross-examination lasting throughout the day. After consulting with his assistant, Louis Goldstein, Mr.
Croysey called Ellsworth Rogers, rector of the Union Bank, under the Sullivan regime. The witness testified he gave bank stock as collateral for notes and afterward was adjudged a bankrupt. In spite of this, he said, his note for $10,700 was carried among the assets in the Grout report of March 25, 1910.
